It has been suggested that since private enterprise has thus far proved unequal to this task, Council take it in hand; that the horses and ostlers of the Fire Department might be profitably occupied in this work; and that Council provide sprinkers and set them to work. It would certainly be better for both horses and men to be employed than to be idle, and the cost of the sprinklers would not be great; and so it looks to us as if a start might be made in this way. We take the liberty of bringing the suggestion, (which is not our own) to the attention of Council. We have not advise a meeting of that body very strongly (for we are not sure but we would rather put up with the dust than with council) but if a meeting must be held, it might be well to take this idea of utilities the Fire Department under advisecost of the sprinklers would not be great; ting the Fire Department under advise-
